

Mary Miller

I am tired of the constant attack on the world's environment by the oil industry and the current administration, both at the federal and state levels. We need to immediately end our reliance on fossil fuels and instead, put our resources into the development of renewable and sustainable resources. It is a crime against humanity and indeed, not changing our ways will be the death of humanity. While I realize our current energy system uses fossil fuels, we need to change the systemic bias towards their use and promote renewable energy while also consuming less. I am very concerned about the impact of future leaks and contamination by fossil fuels on our marine life, and how it affects the entire food chain. We have ample fossil fuels in storage and do not need to develop more. That said, we need to strengthen our response to oil spill disasters as more and more tankers are coming through the Bering Straits from Russia.